Bio for publication

Satoshi Onodera is the founder of Reinvent NY and a licensed New York real estate broker. Born in Miyagi, Japan, in 1988, he worked at NTT DATA, where he was posted to Los Angeles and ran M&A work in India, and at Mercari on payments, before founding Reinvent NY in New York in 2019. He advises buyers from Japan on how to hold US property, by name, entity and tax position, and represents them through the purchase. In 2025 he was ranked in the top 10% of agents on Zillow.

What he can comment on

The Manhattan condo market

Pricing and inventory at the top of the market, new development against resale, who is buying.

Foreign buyers in US real estate

Buying as an individual or through an entity, non-resident tax, FIRPTA withholding on sale.

Japanese investment in the US

Why Japanese buyers and companies choose New York, and how the yen changes the calculation.

NYC rents and the cost of living

Rent levels, the 40x income rule in tenant screening, what newcomers run into first.

Japanese companies entering the US

Choosing a base, office space, the practical setup around a US subsidiary.

Fintech and AI on the ground

How payment services and AI tools are actually used in New York.
